NEW HORIZONS

North Carolina Central University School of Law

December 2002

Gary L. Henderson '99
Attorney, Private Practice

"The reason that I gave is because NCCU Law has opened so many doors and provided me with many opportunities that can't be quantified. So if giving a few dollars can somehow better the school and repay the debt that I owe, then, why not give?"

"The reason I gave to the Law School is the same reason I donated my time for the new student orientation: I want to do everything in my power to help the Law School attract and graduate lawyers who will be assets to the bar and to the community. I couldn't resist the opportunity to double my gift through the Title III match grant."

Paula K. McGrann '01
Attorney, Kurtz & Blum

First-Time Donors Speak...

"I would like to thank the Law School for all of the support it has provided me over the past few years. I am forever indebted for all that the Law School has provided. Now it is my turn to return the favor, slowly but surely."

Kristopher B. Gardner '02
Attorney, Tharrington Smith

Michael D. Barnes '98
Attorney, Barnes Law Office, PLLC

"I chose to support NCCU because of the law school's historical significance in our state/nation and because NCCU gave me an opportunity to launch what I hope will continue to be a fruitful and rewarding career."

Kenneth S. Broun
Professor, UNC School of Law

"I am most pleased to be able to make a contribution to the excellent work of the NCCU School of Law. All of us involved in legal education know of the tremendous work done by the school and the high quality of its faculty and students. The Law School very much deserves our support."

"My daughter attends NCCU in Durham as an undergraduate on a scholarship. Because NCCU is giving to her, I thought I would give back in the community where I work, the Law School. Because the University helped her, I wanted to help the University."

Deborah R. Powell
Receptionist, Law School

Title III: We Met The Match!

September 30, 2002 marked a special day for the North Carolina Central University School of Law. The Law School met a challenge grant of $850,000, bringing a total of $1.7 million to the Law School, an unprecedented fund raising achievement.

In October 2001, the federally funded Title III program issued the Law School an $850,000 matching opportunity, the second matching grant opportunity that Title III has ever provided the Law School. For every dollar that the Law School raised, Title III matched the Law School dollar for dollar. Title III established three basic criteria for this matching grant.

Criteria included that the Law School must raise the matching funds: (1) between the dates of October 2001 – September 2002; (2) from private and/or state funds only, as no federal funding could count towards the matching grant; and (3) for expenditure only on approved Title III efforts.

The new and improved Classroom 100

The Law School launched a special campaign inviting Law School employees, alumni, friends, foundation partners, law firms and state funding partners to join in this fundraising endeavor to meet the match. Through letters, personal conversations, and proposals, the Law School was victorious. Director of Development Melissa Davis remarked, "Meeting the 2001-2002 Title III challenge grant opportunity was a tremendous boost to the overall development efforts of the Law School. Many alumni and friends were first time donors, providing for an increase in our alumni giving and more importantly helping to address current state budget cuts. The continued investment of alumni and friends is certainly the key to the transformation that is underway at the Law School."

Private contributions from faculty/staff, alumni, friends and foundations accounted for approximately 28%, additional private funds earmarked for special student scholarships and internships accounted for approximately 21%, state funds provided 44%, and in-kind support represented approximately 7%, or nearly $65,000, of the matching grant. Sarah Tugman, Director of Special Events and Foundations, shared that "in-kind support plays a critical role in preparing the Law School to engage in meaningful relationships with the members of the private philanthropic community. In-kind gifts of time and tangible items demonstrate the service commitment of alumni and friends to the Law School and diversify contributions."

Tugman's office documented in-kind support of alumni and friends by recording volunteer time and donated items. Volunteer activities included helping with student orientation for the 1L class, judging at various moot court and trial advocacy competitions, serving as guest lecturers, and providing general resources for day-to-day operations of the Law School. Over 50 alumni and friends donated approximately 800 hours to support the Law School.

Dean Janice L. Mills and all members of the Law School family were pleased with meeting the Title III challenge. Recently, with the support of previously received Title III funds, Classrooms 100 and 102 were fully renovated. The Moot Courtroom is the next project scheduled for renovation. The additional funds that the Title III match has supplied will assist with other renovation projects in the Law School's basement, the creation of a modest new Law School wing, and wireless and distance learning technology.

Reflecting on the success of the Title III challenge campaign, Dean Mills said, "As we plan for the future, we are certain that in order for the Law School to remain competitive, we must expand and enhance our physical facilities as well as our academic programs and student scholarship services. The continued financial and service support of alumni, friends and the state and federal governments, like that experienced with this most recent Title III campaign, assures our imminent success."

About Title III and the Law School

Title III is a component of the Higher Education Act of 1965. It was enacted to provide federal assistance for higher education institutions to strengthen and improve academic quality, enhance administrative capacity, and establish endowment fund in order to achieve growth and self-sufficiency. Amendments to the Act have altered various elements of the program, but it remains basically as written - an instrument to provide assistance to institutions demonstrating a constructive effort to strengthen themselves. In recent years, nearly 500 colleges and universities throughout the United States and its territories have received Title III funds annually.*

The North Carolina Central University School of Law has been a recipient of Title III funds since the latter half of the 1980s. Title III funds are issued through a five-year grant period, with funding requests required each year of the grant period. Therefore, although Title III covers a five-year cycle, each year the grant request must be renewed and go through an approval process to be awarded.

The Model Law Office, used for the Law School's Clinical Programs, was a product of Title III funds.

Currently, the Law School is in the fourth year of a five-year grant period, at the end of which we will have received as much as $1 million or nearly 20% of the Law School's annual operating budget. Title III challenge grants provide an additional source of federal income, beyond the annual grant awards of the established five-year grant cycle.
