DOES JUSTICE HAVE A COLOR? LAW: IS IT A SKIN GAME?

The following was delivered as the "Law Day" address at North Carolina Central University on April 13, 1973. The author, Howard Moore, Jr., is a civil rights attorney who has earned the appellation, "The People's Lawyer."

Mr. Moore is a graduate of Morehouse College and Boston University School of Law. Following graduation from law school, Mr. Moore was appointed to a clerkship for Judge Wyzanski of the federal District Court in Boston. He returned to his home in Atlanta, Georgia following the two year clerkship to practice law. Among his clients while in Atlanta were Dr. Martin Luther King, Rep. Julian Bond, H. "Rap" Brown, Stokely Carmichael and Cleveland Sellers.

As a result of his reputation for representing leaders in the Black liberation struggle, Mr. Moore was recommended to serve as counsel in the defense of Angela Davis in the California conspiracy trial. Following the successful representation of Miss Davis, Mr. Moore served as co-counsel during the New York trial of H. "Rap" Brown.

Mr. Moore is presently maintaining offices in Atlanta and Berkeley, California. As scholar-advocate, Mr. Moore has written several legal articles as well as having co-authored two books.
